Public Education Campaign Targets High Price of Dental Coverage

Program comes to Sacramento in honor of National Children's Dental Health Month

Sacramento, Calif. – February 26, 2008 – The California Department of Managed Health Care (DMHC) teamed up with First Dental Health (FDH) to bring its public health education campaign to Sacramento in honor of National Children's Dental Health Month. The campaign is designed to address the availability and need for accessible dental care for the nearly 15 million dentally uninsured Californians.

The campaign came to American Lakes Elementary School in Sacramento today, where first graders were given free oral health assessments. More than 51 million school hours are lost a year because of dental-related illness.

During National Children's Dental Health Month, parents are encouraged to model good dental care habits, and make sure that every member of the family has regular check-ups. Dental care should begin with a baby's first tooth -- parents should gently brush or wipe baby teeth, and make annual dental appointments beginning with the first birthday.

In addition, the DMHC is reminding parents of a new state law, AB 1433, requiring children to receive dental health checkups in their first year of public school. With the end of the school year fast approaching, the oral health screenings at American Lakes Elementary will help parents meet this state requirement.

Other campaign efforts will include similar visits to communities throughout the state, including Los Angeles, the Inland Empire, and the Bay Area, to provide free oral health assessments to elementary school students, participate in community events, and work with other health-related organizations to raise awareness of the correlation between oral health and overall health. Education materials will be distributed through partnership programs with the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation, the California State Parent Teachers Association (PTA) and the California School Nurses Organization.

“Every family in California should have an equal opportunity to receive the best dental care needed to remain healthy and productive,” said Michael S. Grossman, D.D.S., -founder and CEO of First Dental Health, one of California’s largest dental network management companies and the only licensed discount dental plan in the state. “People don’t realize the magnitude that oral health plays in their overall health and the treatment and management of other diseases. Our public education campaign begins with our children because establishing proper oral health habits now will help them for a lifetime.”

“California’s new law requiring children to receive dental checkups in their first year of public school is an important first step in highlighting the importance of oral health and making it a part of a comprehensive public health care program,” said Cindy Ehnes, Director of the Department of Managed Health Care. “We also want families to know that California is now licensing discount medical and dental plans so that parents have affordable, dependable options to get their families the health care they need. Licensure ensures that plans are available with access to the same high quality dental and medical care as traditional insurance plans.”

First Dental Health’s discount dental plan New Dental Choice is currently accepted by more than 7,500 dentists in 13,700 locations throughout California. Members simply show their membership cards to receive discounts of 25 to 60 percent on more than 300 procedures, including regular checkups, orthodontics, crowns, teeth whitening, and dental implants.

Licensing ensures that members are protected by measures that no other discount plan in the state can offer, including a quality assurance program featuring credentialed dentists, true and verifiable discounts, truth in advertising, and a dispute-resolution process.
